Mrs. Eugene Smith, of Massachusetts, who is living in a barn on her late father-in-law's estate at Freeport, L. I. in order to gain possession of the house coccupied by Henry Geus, still holds the fort, notwithstanding Police Justice A. B. Wallace threatened her with dispossession to-day if she did not vacate.

The Magistrate is experiencing diffeculty in getting any of the village officers to execute his order. This morning he was searching for some one with courage enough to set the furniture in the street, but his efforts proved unsuccessful. He may have to do the work himself.

Mrs. Smith declares she will not leave the barn until overpowered and carried out. She has barricaded the doors against invaders and promises to make it exceedingly interesting for any one who attempts to molest her.

Mrs. Smith is a wealthy woman. Her abode in the barn is from choice, not necessity. She has a mind of her own
